OBSERVER CORPS NOW ROYAL.

When the story of the war comes to be written, prominent place must be given to the men who, in town and country from coast to coast, keep ceaseless watch on the skies from roof tops, huts, pill boxes, and trenches for the approach of enemy aircraft.

In recognition of the valuable services of the Observer Corps, His Majesty has approved that in future it be known as the Royal Observer Corps. After years of devoted and arduous service the announcement by the Secretary of Air brings the Corps out of obscurity into the limelight it so nobly deserves. Founded originally as a civilian body of special constables before the war, the Royal Observer Corps holds a highly skilled and essential position in the defence of Britain. In all weathers, and at all times of the day and night, they take on their great responsibility. With so many different types of allied and enemy planes in existence, it's no simple matter.

R.O.C. A rock firm in Britain's Defence. We have every reason to be proud of the men of the Royal Observer Corps -- they're grand fellows.
