BRITISH WOMEN FOR THE AFRICAN FRONT.

Off to join the already considerable number of British women in Northern Africa are these members of the Mechanised Transport Corps. Many of them have already seen service in France, (including their O.C. Mrs. Keith Newall, who was wounded over there in an air raid) They have all come to Africa at their own expense.

They wear a special blue Springbok badge, and are ready for anything... whether it's shell fire or tropical sun.

During a short stay in South Africa, they've made friends with many of the girls in the forces, and some of them come to say au revoir.

Very soon, they'll all be in it together.
