

ITALIAN PRISONERS IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Its quite a problem, what to do with the host of Italian prisoners taken in the North African campaign. Men of a South African Scottish Regiment conduct a batch of around eight-thousand to a Union Port. Many of the prisoners are mere boys. Its a crime that kids like these should have to face the horrors of war. The men are bedraggled, and present a pitiful sight.

The wounded are taken to hospital, while the destination of the others is an island concentration camp. The Scottish Guards shepherd them aboard the trains, where they're safe in believing that the worst is behind them, and there'll be more pals to join them soon. Leave it to the Jocks to bring home the garlic.
