

WITH THE NAVY

With bulldog like tenacity British warships track down and waylay two German supply ships. Before any attack is made a "Walrus" aircraft is catapulted away to investigate. Without further ado, Supply ship No. 1. fires a scuttle charge and the crew take to the boats as their vessel goes up in flames. Meanwhile, with the return of the seaplane, Supply Ship No. 2 (an oil tanker) is exploded by gunfire.

Now there's a bit of Nazi collecting to be done. The crews of both ships are taken prisoner while heavy columns of smoke blacken the sky.

Travelling to their place of internment, the prisoners are shipped away to a West African port. Well, this is the end of the story, except that one well-known frequenter of the docks wanted to know where Adolf was. He'd been saving up quite a lot for him.
