

41/57

INCIDENT NEAR SOLLUM

When the heavy stuff begins to come over, a bit of "ducking" is quite in order... especially when it happens around Hell Fire Corner outside Sollum, where this bombardment is taking place. From an observation post can be seen enemy shell bursts among some of our transports, as units of our fighting forces make a probe into enemy occupied territory. Plenty of action of this sort is going on all the time around Sollum, and our Tank units make many a successful Sertie into the Western Desert. Under cover of an escarpment, men of a famous Scottish Regiment move forward to take up night positions.

A few ancient catacombs (now that the snakes and spiders and scorpions have been got rid of) make safe and reasonably comfortable quarters for men of the Royal Corps of Signals. And when a nice long line of Jerry prisoners is brought in, it's obvious that the day has been a successful one.

That's what we like to see. The more Pygmalion Bosche put out of the way, the better.