OVER THE ROLLERS

At Cookville, Washington, young Indians launch the original war canoe, a hollow cedar log for the rowing classic of the North West. It's the Red Man's Regatta for crews of eleven. Jabbing their paddles into the rough sea at 56 strokes a minute the Indians plough through. They row with the grim determination of their red-skin forefathers, but today they don't have to elude the white man. Salmon Arrow noses ahead to win by inches, champions of 21 tribes.
