INTERNATIONAL SOCCER AT WEMBLEY.

Sixty five thousand people pack the Wembley Stadium for the England-Scotland match. With the English players in white shirts, the two teams take the field for another classic contest. The Prime Minister has a handshake for each of the footballers before the start of play.

The kick-off, and England and Scotland are fighting each other at last (German papers please copy). The Englishmen are quickly on the attack with the Scotsmen putting up a stiff resistance. It's really like old times again.

Long before half time it's obvious that the English team is the stronger. Scotland put in several storming raids but their successes are short lived.

And Mr.Churchill studies the play as if it were Adolf chasing Musso round the Brenner Pass.

And here's one of the two English goals scored in the first half. The Scottish supporters find life just a little hard right now.

And that's how the scoreboard looks at the end of play. England "two" beats Scotland "no score".

And when they leave, Mr. & Mrs. Churchill give the Victory V sign. They must be thinking about the war.
