A.T.S. GIRLS WITH THE GUNS

In the concrete emplacements at a gun site in the London Area, battle dressed A.T.S. girls are in training for active service. Operating predictors and range finders, they are responsible for the location of aircraft, and through their instruments, give the target position to the gunners. Highly technical work in a delicate nerve-centre of defence.

Except for the actual manning of the heavy guns, the girls are able to operate all the intricate apparatus of an anti-aircraft command post.

The Secretary of State for War, Captain Margesson, makes a call to see the girls at work.
