Big scale manoeuvres in U.S.A.

Uncle Sam's First Army Corps goes blitzing. Some four hundred thousand troops transform ten thousand square miles of the Carolinas into a proving ground for men and machines. Big scale operations lasting two months, during which time they try out this thing called war.

An advance guard with a touch of the gangster film about it.

A couple of armoured cars which don't like the look of each other shoot it out on the road.

By gad, sir, the Cavalry. What a grand sight they make. And they always leave something behind to tell where they've been.

And here's where the engineers come into the picture. One more river to cross, and in the midst of it all, suffer the attention of aircraft simulating dive bombers.

Well, two months of that and they ought to be ready for anything.
