

MARYLAND BOMBERS.

An actual operational flight by Maryland bombers brings us a series of fine close ups of these American-built aircraft in action over the Western Desert. Enemy anti-aircraft guns send up a certain amount of Flak but the target is located and away go the bombs as the bomb-aimer pin-points his objective. Raids over the ~~many~~ enemy lines and attacks on supply bases in Cyrenaica and Tripolitania by the Marylands, helped to pave the way for our big offensive in Libya.

A bit of shrapnel finds its mark in the port engine of one of the ~~aircraft~~ aircraft. The motor cuts out and the plane begins to drop back. But a Maryland flying on one motor can still make its base. These bombers are doing splendid work in the Middle East and can outfly any Italian fighter sent up against them. With a speed of over 300 miles an hour in reserve, the Martin Maryland is making its mark in the skies over North Africa.
