SWEEP BY AN AUSTRALIAN SQUADRON.

A visit to an Australian Fighter Squadron of the R.A.F. finds a group of the lads working on a plan of operations, prior to a sweep over the Nazi occupied French Coast Line.

The central figure in this group is "BLUE" an Aussie with eleven huns to his credit. The thing to remember about these pictures is that they are of actual operational work - taking you to the aerodrome during a typical working day in the fighting routine of this Australian Squadron.

A flying visit to France has a new meaning these days. Back after their trip the planes check in, each pilot with a thrilling story to tell in the most casual manner imaginable. We'll eavesdrop on the conversations between pilots and Intelligence Officers as the Aussies recount their experiences.

All very matter-of-fact... but many a decoration has been won by these Kangaroos with wings.
