

MOPPING UP IN LIBYA.

Grossing the desert South of Tobruk, British armoured cars form part of a giant circle which, while receiving wireless directions from one of our Generals at the front, weave^s an iron web in which to trap the remaining pockets of enemy resistance around Sellum and Bardia. The route from El Gobi to El Adem is but one of Rommel's military grave yards. A desert cemetary^R in which are being hunted-out the stragglers of a now shattered Axis force. Sections of infantry are seen here mopping up the tattered remains of Rommel's "left-overs", abandoned with their dead in the Nazi General's head-long flight to Benghazi and beyond.

or: and
which...
weave

In Cyrenaica, British and Imperial forces have won a magnificent victory.