KING AND QUEEN VISIT THE ULSTER CANTEEN.

These exclusive pictures of the King and Queen at the Ulster Canteen in London, bring into prominence a war-time rest centre which has been giving hospitality to fighting men for over two years. Although its primary object is to provide a "port of call" for Ulster troops on leave, men and women of all the services, from a Merchant Seaman to an Air Raid Warden are equally welcomed. Their Majesties are soon surrounded by men eager for a word from the Royal visitors.

On approaching the Service counter, the Queen dispenses all formality by pouring out a mug of tea for the soldier with whom she is in conversation. A charming act of friendliness which is so characteristic of her. The Ulster Canteen is a pioneer in the field of service for the services. Today's visit by Their Majesties is a landmark in its fine history of voluntary help.
