"COMING OVER" From our Cameraman with the A.E.F. Convoy.

Heavily guarded troopships plough their way towards the Irish Coast. Lifeboat drills are part of the daily routine. This latest addition to the American Expeditionary Force includes a number of Army Nurses.

Down it soldier, it'll stop things from running loose inside you. Feeling pale eh? That's nothing, quite a number of the nurses are down below hanging on to a little pail. Oh happy days ahere, how it all comes back.

On ~~deck~~ deck, if you can take it, thr smell of sea spray, hot engine-room oil and cooking does you a lot of no good. It's the sight of land that matters most. "Welcome, Convoy", we'll turn the sun on for you.

Slight set-back in the weather. But what a chance for the doughboys to go to town with the Axis partners.

Misses him! - - oh yeah! Yes, the lads who have not got acclimatised are giving vent to their high spirits, in the obvious way when there's snow on the ground.

A real good natured rough-house has developed, so let's fade out and look in on some of their buddies in London. You'll always find plenty of 'em satisfying healthy appetites in Canteen Mess Rooms. London is a happy hunting ground for the sightseers. There's so much to see that it's always a toss-up where to go first.

When in doubt, ask a policeman. St. Paul's Cathedral and the devastation that surrounds it, will create a lasting impression on the minds of these men seeing for the first time the ugly scar that was the agony of London's city.

Well, look at this; A Peep load of doughboys at Trafalgar Square. (A Peep is the young brother of the bigger Army car "The Jeep", in case you want to know). Yes, that was Britain's best Admiral. Our pigeons don't seem to realise it, but then those birds never were respecters of persons.

Our motto is a bird in the hand is worth two up aloft.
