

NEWSBRIEFS:

Britons and Americans make good mixers. Pathe Gazette Brings you now the first pictures of British troops ~~and~~ in America. The first batch to arrive in the United States pass in review at a reception area in New York State. We're not told to which regiment they belong; but they look "bonny wee lads".

Officers and men from both sides of the Atlantic find that "get together" spirit the most natural thing in the world.

American hospitality knows all the answers. Miss Manhattan has it all figured out. One on each arm maybe, but she's got a sister.

At a Port on the Pacific Seaboard of America the U.S. Destroyer SHAW completes an historic two thousand mile journey from Pearl Harbour. SHAW was in dry dock when a Jap bomb hit her magazine destroying her bow. Workmen amputated the wreckage and rigged up amakeshift forepart good enough to bring her home under her own steam. Yes, they'll remember Pearl Harbour.

News from America still claims our interest. These are the new ^{the} Amphibian tanks, newest weapons of invasion. Manned by U.S. Marines ~~and~~ sea-going tanks show their ability to land troops anywhere. How they work is a closely guarded secret, but what we see of their capabilities makes us take to these "battle wagons"(as they call'em) like a tank takes to water.
