H.M.S. RENOWN COMES HOME.

H.M.S. RENOWN returns to Home Waters. These pictures just released by the Censor show Britain's great battle cruiser passing under a massive span of the Forth Bridge as she comes into port for a service overhaul. Since the beginning of the war RENOWN has covered over 137,000 miles at sea. See how the rust blows off her anchor chain as it's lowered the first time for a year and a day.

This is what the Navy calls de-ammunitioning fifteen-inch bricks. Shells for her main armament being hauled out of her magazines and slung into barges alongside. From stem to stern the great capital ship will be overhauled, and got ready for a continuation of her important job afloat.

Part of the ship's company is granted shore leave. The men who sail in her have earned every minute of it.

All present and correct sir. Hoy, Charley, where's the parrot?.
