ALLIES WEEK IN EDINBURGH.

The big parade which marks the opening of Edinburgh's Allies Week has the added distinction of being the first of its kind in Britain. The Lord Provost, William Darling, takes the salute... as contingents from all parts of the country ~~representing~~ representing the British Commonwealth of Nations march in the long line of Allied Forces. Two thousand men and women of the services swing down Princes Street with detachments of Allied fighting men. The inspiring pageant is a forceful reminder of the massing strength, of the United Nations, which are poised for the hour of liberation of their ever-run and tortured countries.

Colour parties carrying the flags of all the Allies have a prominent place in the display, which presents a sight to stir the imagination of everyone.
