FIRST GERMAN PRISONERS ARRIVE IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Quite a large number of Axis troops from the Libyan war zones are still in Africa, but not the part where General Rommel intended them to be. As Prisoners of War, these crack Nazi Afrika Korps troops (the majority of them in their early twenties) have been shipped to a Union Seaport, where they'll spend the rest of the war in an internment camp. Among the prisoners are Major-General Arthur Schmidt who surrendered at Bardia, and General Von Ravenstein.

The last we see of these products of the Hitler Youth Movement is in the general movement in the direction of a waiting train which will take them on the last lap of their journey. In future their Nazi salutes will mean only one thing. This time they will not be excused.
