

VICTIMS OF JAP RAID ON DARWIN.

A newly equipped Red Cross Train arrives at Central Station Sydney, bringing men of the Australian Army, Navy and Air Force and Mercantile Marine who were injured during Japanese air raids on Darwin. They've certainly been through the mill, but listen to what they think of things , as summed up by a typical Digger.

Even badly hurt men are completely cheerful. The more seriously wounded are taken straight to Military hospitals. All had thrilling experiences to relate and unanimously paid tribute to hospital personnel and the gun crews in gallant little Darwin.

The first Australians to be wounded on their own soil by enemy action are pretty sore about it. In the words of their Prime Minister, they're "fighting mad".
