CHURCHILL IN U.S.A.

During his visit, the Prime Minister and Mr. Roosevelt consulted with the members of the Pacific War Council. Inter-Allied discussions which dealt with many aspects of the war. The premier was also present at a big aerial display at Fort Jackson. Walking over the airfield packed with Paratroops, he came into personal contact with American Sky-troops from whom we may presumably expect big things in collaboration with our own.

We've grown quite accustomed to seeing displays such as this; so by adding them all up, we'll jump to the conclusion that when American and British Paratroops jump together, their point of landing will prove a bigger capture than a training field.

With the memory of this and other things, in his mind, Mr. Churchill was soon on his way back by plane to England for the big Parliamentary debate.
