GANGSTERS IN INDIA.

Every country has its gangsters, and the recent trouble in India was an opportune moment for a tribe of terrorists, known as the Hurs, to run amok in the North West Province of Sind. The nomadic tribe have travelled down to the outlying towns and villages to perform their deeds of banditry. In search of easy plunder, the Hurs swooped down on the Lahore Mail Train.

Twenty two people were killed when the express was derailed in the disaster near Tandoandam Junction. The ruthless tribesmen had started a reign of terror.

Headlines then announced "Martial Law". Every corner was to be combed for the perpetrators. Indian police patrolled the streets for the followers of the "Turbaned Saint" - their leader.

The hue and cry was successful. Although several captures were made, the authorities were determined to stamp out this KU KLUX KLAN of the North West.

The Military were called in to seek their Mountain hideouts. Troop-carrying planes and paratroops went into action over the treacherous country where the Hurs were known to be. And that did the trick. Born of a mediaeval tribe of assassins and with a spy system that has a touch of magic about it, the Hurs are now under lock and key. So fact is stranger than fiction after all.
