HOME FROM THE FAR EAST.

An Egyptian liner is one of the two "Diplomat" ships to bring a thousand British people from the Far East. As Sir Robert Craigie, British Ambassador to Japan and Lady Craigie set ashore, another passenger is seen carrying some priceless relics of a forgotten age.

An infant, born during the mother's escape from Bangkok, now ill with pneumonia. Aboard the NARKUNDA are nearly nine hundred of the refugees now setting foot on home soil after being interned by the Japanese. Some have only recently been released from Japanese prisons; most of them have lost all but what they stand up in, all of them are victims of the war in the Pacific.
