

LATEST PICTURES FROM MADAGASCAR.

Further pictures showing the occupation of Majunga by British Empire troops have just been received. On the waterfront of the important Madagascan base, supplies and equipment are unloaded in the daylight hours immediately following the midnight assault. Sections of the Kings African Rifles played a prominent part in the operations undertaken by United Kingdom, South and East African troops. A matter of a few hours prior to this orderly entry by our supporting forces, a lively action was taking place on the beaches and among the warehouses, where the high tide nearly carried the invasion craft on to the main seafront road.

The streets of Majunga presented an unruffled appearance; the Malagasy taking the whole affair with equanimity. Outside the Town Hall they calmly read the proclamation announcing the surrender. Three hours had sufficed to give the United Nations control of this important port, with agreeably little force of arms.
