MAHARAJAH TALKS TO BARODA SQUADRON.

Men of the Baroda Fighter Squadron are addressed by the Maharajah of Nawanaga. To the assembled airmen His Highness says :-

"One day very shortly, I shall come and see you at your ordinary routine. I will be amongst you, I may be a darned nuisance because I have a very inquisitive nature. I may ask too many questions, but answer them, I don't mind. Ask them yourself, that will be liked by me even more.

The only thing about Baroda in India, the real portion that matters, you may have read in the papers all sorts of nonsense, but that is not the real India. The real India, your brothers in arms - two millions of them have volunteered - and they will readily die for the same cause as yourself.

God Bless you, and I hope you will bring forth that day very soon, and when that day comes I hope I shall hear that it is this Squadron and this squadron alone that was at the head and that the major work was done by it. I am sure you will do it. Good luck.

The Maharajah (ruler of nearly half a million Indians) receives the cheers of one of Britain's top-line Squadrons.
