ON THE ROAD TO THE WEST.

The Greys move West. Units of this famous Regiment, mounted in their General Grant Tanks, press forward out of Cyrenaica into Tripolitania. Tanks which formed part of the great steel avalanche that fell on Rommel in the Western Desert, and drove him around the Benghazi bend to El Aghaila.

Lieutenant General Sir Bernard Freyberg V.C., G.O.C. of the New Zealand Division, is always to be found in the Van of operations. With his Staff Officers he plans where best he may bring ~~xxx~~ the enemy to battle. The road to the West is strewn with the cremated strength of a stricken army. Every Axis gun and tank destroyed is worth a league of desert won.

With the New Zealand Pennant flying from his tank, General Freyberg leads his men forward. He has been wounded so many times that he may rightly claim to be the most injured General in the British Army. But that doesn't deter him now from passing through a minefield at the head of his New Zealanders.
