SOMALI CAMEL CORPS.

From French Somaliland now ranged alongside the Allies in North Africa, come these pictures of a section of the Somali Camel Corps standing by in readiness for action if and when required.

The Somali's are well trained, and adept in warfare best suited to this type of terrain. To sit a camel and still look like a soldier is an achievement. They are one of the few remaining Camel Corps now in existence.

The agility with which they go into action is only equalled by their almost uncanny marksmanship.

Yes, indeed, Right in der Fuchreh's face!

A KING COMES OF AGE.

Another East African news flash concerns the town of KAMPALA in Uganda. Excitement runs high among the townsfolk, gathered around the Cathedral to witness the accession to the Throne of their new King. The Bishop of Uganda officiates at the Ceremony which marks the coming of age of KABAKA MUTESA II. A christian monarch, he succeeds his father as ruler of Buganda. His Excellency the Governor of Uganda arrives for this momentous event in the Protectorates history as the 36th King of Buganda accedes to the Throne. The Governor is the Honourable Sir Charles Dundas. The new ruler of the Province of Buganda leaves the Cathedral after the service. The King (or KABAKA) is 18 years old and speaks excellent English.
