SAVED FROM THE SEA.

That little boat you see wallowing in the South Atlantic swell has been adrift with its cargo of survivors for 11 days. Castaway merchant sailors picked up by a Belgian freighter after one of the severest ordeals on record. The last chapter to a harrowing story of a mother sunken cargo ship. These men endure the perils and privations of their calling so that others may live. A handful of survivors picked out of the sea, and after an experience which in peace time would have made headlines in every newspaper in the world.

This is how men look after a month in an open boat. The Merchant Mariners are indeed the heroes of the sea routes. They have a slogan. Maybe you've heard it before; it's worth hearing once more, "We're going to sea again".
