

M. MAISKY'S WARNING.

Opening a London Exhibition of Russian pictures, the Soviet Ambassador gives a warning to those who imagine that victory is just around the corner.

"However gratifying are our victories and the fine exploits of your Right Army, it would be the greatest error to think that Nazi Germany is on her last legs. The German war machine during the last few months, received a number of terrible blows. But it has not yet broken. It is still functioning, it is still strong. And the Allies have yet to travel a hard and long road before the enemy will be completely smashed and destroyed and with nothing else can we be satisfied."
