FIELDRAFT TRAINING.

Army men (particularly instructors) have their technical college in which to learn the art of war. An advance Fieldcraft School; a training centre where they can turn on realistic battle with practically all the discomforts and even some of the danger of the real thing. One of our cameramen sampled some of it, during this amphibious attack which employed live ammunition as an added incentive to caution and daring.

The gruelling test goes on through the night, with star shells and gunfire lighting up the scene.

With a bridgehead established the infantry press home their attack. Zero hour for the final assault on the enemy strongpoint and then its "over the top".

An infinitely satisfying experience for those who would get a first taste of battle.
