

ACTION IN NEW GUINEA.

Out of New Guinea come more revealing pictures of Australians and Americans at grips with the Japs around Buna. Keeping cool is literal in both senses of the word. Convention has no place in this distant abode of nightmarish warfare. And what more incongruous than these General Stuart tanks in a pre-historic setting.

To prise the Japanese snipers out of their treetop hide-outs and fox-holes the ~~jukebox~~ tanks wallow into the undergrowth. A few pot shots with a revolver and then the tanks are swallowed up in the tangled foliage in which the Japs are hidden.

Field guns crash-in on the tropical silence, as they rip open a Jap stronghold set in the thickly timbered Papuan Jungle.

Danger lurks in the dugouts and foxholes which the supporting infantry are searching for occupants. Treacherous tricks have been played by wounded Japs, who killed many of their would be rescuers. Trust a Jap and you wake up with wings.
