CAUGHT IN THE ACT.

An arrest at sea. Germans and Italians, trying to make a getaway from Cape Bon are intercepted, and the would-be escapers picked up in mid-ocean by allied vessels which were standing by for such an eventuality. Not a bad effort at escape from Tunis; but it was an foregone conclusion that they would never get through. The empty boats are sunk by machine gun fire.

Quite a few tried to get across the straits under cover of darkness, but they a'll met the same fate. The Cape Bon escapes were no Bon. They had crawled up to the Cape, crept out and got copped.
