(1) TITLE. RELIEVING THE GUARDS

Picture.: Here they come -- the First Battalion of the Yorkshire Regiment, otherwise "The Green Howards" -- arrive at St. James Palace, to take over from the Guards, who are due for their annual period of training. The serviceable Khaki uniforms of the Green Howards are in marked contrast to that of the Guards -- but they're a very smart body of men, nevertheless.

Here you see the colours of the two regiments, the Green Howards and the Coldstream Guards being paraded side by side up and down the forecourt of St. James Palace.

Then the sentries are relieved.

The first Coldstreamer is seen making way for a Green Howard -- with traditional smartness.

Having been completely relieved from guarding the Royal Palaces, the Guards then march away to barracks preparatory to entraining for their annual camp.

The Green Howards are quite proud of their new duties.

(2) TITLE.:-THE GUARDS AT CAMP.

Picture.: These are the Coldstreams whom you have just seen being relieved from guarding the Royal Palaces.

In Khaki now, they are marching into their camp at Goodwood -- which makes a peaceful sight before the arrival of the troops.

The Life Guards are also there, but you would not recognize them in their work-a-day garb -- quite a contrast to their magnificent dress uniforms.

And the Scots Guards are there. They are off on a route march -- led by a couple of pipers.
