Picture. :- Athletes from every corner of the Commonwealth of Nations took part in the British Empire Games at Hamilton. Following the Newfoundland contingent come the men from Bermuda, with British Guiana coming next. Then come the contestants from far away Australia -- and a rather bigger contingent from South Africa, bent on gaining some victories for the Union. Two athletic misses are amongst the competitors from New Zealand who are determined to give a good account of themselves. Wales and Ireland have two representatives only -- while Scotland has as fine a team of athletes as ever came from beyond the Tweed.

Naturally Canadians are there in full force -- they are the rear-guard of the grand march past.

One has got used to Lord Burghley winning hurdling races, and this one is no exception.

His victory was an extremely popular one.

The six-miles presented an unlooked-for thrill --

Third man from the left -- ooh! -- a nasty cropper.

The Half Mile. J.H. Chandler of South Africa leads all the way and wins in one-minute-fifty-six-and-four-fifths-seconds. Splendid!

TITLE. :- DEAUVILLE DOINGS.

Pictare. :- Society (with a capital "S") -- from every country crowds the beach at Deauville, the fashionable watering place on the Northern French coast.

This year pyjamas and large hats are favoured by the fair ones.

Some actually bathe in the sea, but these are mostly members of the younger generation. They spend most of their time in the water --

--while the majority prefer basking in the sun, acquiring that beautiful tan which disappears all too soon on return to town. Here are a couple of charming visitors who are determined to acquire as much tan as possible.

The beach presents a colourful picture with its mass of humanity and gay umbrellas.
