

(8). TITLE.:- FOR BABY PRINCESS.

Picture.:- Presents are already being received by the Duchess of York's new baby. Here are the splendid ambulance workers assembling at Forfar to present to the Earl of Strathmore, grandfather of the infant Princess, a spoon of gold.

The Earl regretted that he couldn't return thanks in the baby's name, for as he said, he did not know the name of the lady -- yet !

(9). TITLE.:- OUR ROBOT ARMY.

Picture.:- Little villages are shaken into wakefulness by these war machines as they move up into position for what are officially termed "exercises".

Hundreds of tanks play this great game of hide-and-seek on Salisbury Plain -- Most of them can travel at thirty or more miles an hour, and receive their instructions by wireless.

This one puts up a smoke screen to hide itself and its fellows --

While I recommend these to any local council wishing to tear up their roads -- they do it just as efficiently as workmen.

While they disturb some of the peaceful scenery, one must admit that they make an inspiring sight as they cross the Avon.

These bridges are specially constructed to stand the strain of twenty-ton loads, so its not so risky as it looks.

These activities provide very valuable lessons to the powers that be.
