

(4).

TITLE.:- DEEP SEA DRILL.

Picture.:- While airships carry out manoeuvres over the sea, aeroplanes do their bit; and below, many fine ships make a great show of speed and efficiency. These pictures were taken from a 'plane which was allowed to accompany the fleet by courtesy of the Navy Department.

It's a good job that smoke nuisance regulations don't apply at sea, or somebody would find trouble.

Smoke has its uses here, for it provides a wonderfully effective screen for the ships. A stern necessity in time of war. As our plane crosses the line of route of the ships, we get a clear demonstration of just how effective a shield it can be. It almost makes one cough to see so much dense black smoke.

Co-operation between the aircraft and surface vessels is a strong point of the American Navy's training, and it has much to commend it.

More smoke, in plenty --

--this time blotting out a good-looking parade of destroyers in line abreast stretching far away into the distance.

Here's a dashing unit of Uncle Sam's Navy. Destroyer --

--number two-forty-two gives a fine exhibition of speed, cutting through the sea like a knife.

A great show, designed to inspire pride.

(5).

TITLE.:- DOGS WITH A DIFFERENCE.

Picture.:- These life-like little fellows and girls are all ready for new owners at Christmas. A dog fight serves to liven--

--up the time of waiting. They're a bright looking little bunch of youngsters,--

--to whom a fight of this kind is a real thrill, although it disturbs the harmony of toy-land.

They're great little people destined to gladden some youngsters hearts at Christmas.

Hullo ! Ronald and Eustace really mean business ! Well, it's their own affair, anyway.