

(10) TITLE.:- NAVY'S BIG PARADE.

Picture.:- You couldn't expect to see much more of our navy at one glance. These mighty bulwarks of Britain --

--must have inspired our visitors from over the seas with understandable pride in the good old Motherland.

It's called the "silent" service, but it's not so quiet when they start such things as laying --

--depth charges which send up great columns of water into the air as they explode. They look as though they would teach a lesson to any vessel poking its nose in where it wasn't wanted.

The big ships then put up a little demonstration, just to show --

--that they are all O.K. in case anyone starts trouble.

No wonder we're proud of Jelly Jack.

The awful weather made it impossible to put up a bigger show for the Dominion Premiers --

--but' they can't fail to have a very good impression of what our navy means to us, and them.

Storm clouds gathered as the great ships returned to Portland, to rest with one eye open, as may always be said of our lads in blue.
