

(10). TITLE.:- FIRE CARNIVAL.

Picture.:- From far and wide thousands come to this grand orgy of fire. The fun starts with a torchlight procession, including some big tableaux which are destined to go up in flames and smoke before morning.

Over three thousand torches are in the procession which parades the streets lighting them up with a brilliance which, at other times, would put the wind up everybody for miles around. A very fitting tribute to the infamous soldier of fortune, Guy Fawkes, who would have upset the Parliament of his day, if they had left him alone.

Lingfield enjoyed itself, and when asked what should be done with their effigy of Guy, answered as one voice, "Burn him".

And-they-did ! Here's how ! No man ever had a hotter time, and I doubt if anyone ever did afterwards, however bad they were !

As a grand finale to the carnival a big tableau is sent the way of Guy Fawkes ! And it was not until it burnt itself out that Lingfield called it a day.
