

C-495281

(5).

TITLE.:- ARMISTICE DAY IN PARIS.

Picture. :- The famous General Gouraud, Military Governor of Paris, introduces the troops of which he is so proud.

France commemorates the day quite differently to Britain. The French --

--President, M. Doumergue, with most of his ministers reviews a great display --

--of the soldiery of the nation. Cadets of the famous military academy of Saint Cyr, potential officers of the French Army of the future, head the grand march past the Arc de Triomphe.

Then come Les Pompiers, carrying their trumpets in a manner peculiarly their own. So the parade goes on and on.

The Arc makes a wonderful setting for such an event as this great annual review, the rearguard of which consists of a number of armoured cars from the various mechanical transport regiments of the army.

Thus it is that France celebrates its Fête of Victory, as it is called. Every man who can be spared is on parade for the big march past and one must agree that it's a fine sight.

Finally, the flags of the hundreds of regiments which fought in the war, are taken back to rest in safe custody for yet another year.