

HINKLER COMES HOME ! Bert Hinkler, hero of the South Atlantic solo flight, arrives at Hanworth, Middlesex.

Picture.:- Yet another air record; in Lord Wakefield's words "possibly the greatest achievement--

--in the history of aviation." Bert Hinkler arrives at Hanworth--

--Aerodrome after a solo flight across the South Atlantic.

In doing this he has carried man's conquest of the air yet a stage further on its breath-taking way. Small wonder that everybody wishes to cheer him and to cheer him. The French people called him a "great little man".
Little in stature, but great in qualities of head and heart.

"We shall know you in future as the super Airman of the Empire" said one-- --of the many prominent persons headed by Lord Londonderry who welcomed him on arrival-- --at the Aerodrome. But outside of that the whole of Britain welcomes him.

When he arrived shortly after flying a baby aeroplane two thousand miles in twenty-two hours, he said he-- --wasn't tired. Well, that's the sort of man he is !

Sir, we take off our hats !

AND SO, FOR THE PRESENT, I LEAVE YOU !
