

SCHOOLDAYS OVER - Passing Out inspection of Aircraft Apprentices, at Halton.

-Buckinghamshire-

Picture 1:- Here are nearly four hundred aircraft apprentices who have seen the last of school !

They are being inspected by Air-Marshal Sir W.G.H Salmon, Commander-in-Chief of Britain's Air Defences. School apprentices they were; now fully-fledged aircraft men.

By their bearing on parade one might think they had been studying the marching of the guards themselves.

Not one of these lads is yet over twenty years of age ! Yet notice how smartly they obey the command "Eyes Right" as they salute the Air Marshal.

The School of Technical Training at Halton has turned them out efficient aircraftmen, and the advancements of the service are theirs for the winning.

The more ambitious may end up wearing a pair of wings - on the chest - not growing out of the shoulders. Anyway, life with a capital 'L' is before them.
