ROYAL TOUR OF THE TYNESIDE - Prince of Wales sees, at first hand, conditions in northern industrial areas.

Picture.:- Starting his tour of industrial Tyneside, the Prince of Wales visits--

--Bensham Settlement. For one penny per week, this Club provides tools and--

--gives instruction in various trades to men who are otherwise unemployed.

A children's school is also part of the Settlement. The Prince takes--

--an amused and sympathetic look at the kiddies playing as only--

--kiddies can. These are the children of the unemployed.

What a joy a sand pit is. His Highness is making--

--this a 'go-as-I--

--please tour. Even the officials receiving him do not know where he wishes to--

--start or finish. The boy scouts in permanent camp at Gosforth--

--Park have a thrilling half hour when he--

--suddenly appears amongst them. The tour is complete and thorough and means that the Prince is--

--seriously investigating unemployment distress conditions for himself.
