"LADY LINDY" - Miss Amelia Earhart, the first woman to make a lone flight of the Atlantic, arrives at Hanworth.

Picture.:- I wonder what historians of the future will record--

--about the heroic deeds of peace time. One thing I am certain,--

--they will not be able to give an--

--adequate idea of the inner turmoil of Miss Amelia--

--Earhart, nor of those who are privileged to welcome her. The drama--

--of her arrival in the pouring rain is stupendous. The wet atmosphere throbs with it. The hands of hardened press-men quiver as they level--

--their cameras. Mr. Melon, the American Ambassador's--

--handshake is charged with elation, not only because Miss--

--Lindy is an American woman, but because she is a remarkable woman. Four years ago she flew the Atlantic as a--

--passenger. Now she has performed the feat alone,--

--flying the two thousand four hundred miles of hazardous ocean airway--

--under most difficult and dangerous conditions. She has set up three records. She is--

--the only woman to fly the Atlantic alone; she has beaten all previous time records; she is the only--

--living person to fly the Atlantic twice. Wonderful woman !
