

A SOLDIER - - AND A MAN - The nation pays tribute to the late Field-Marshal, Lord Plumer, as his mortal remains are conveyed to their last resting place in Westminster Abbey.
-London-

Picture: London, and through London, Britain, and the whole Empire, pay tribute and homage to the great dead.
The heavy dolourous--

--note of muffled drums interprets the silent sadness of the people. Field-Marshal Viscount Plumer respected and beloved soldier--

--gave the years of his life to the dangerous service of defending his country. Sudan, Matabeleland, South Africa and--

--in the Great War, his two and half years defence of the hopeless salient Ypres, and the taking of the terrible Passchendaele Ridge are engraved on the records of history. Field-Marshal--

--Viscount Allenby and many soldier brethren accompany his--

--corse to its last rest beneath the vaulted arches of Westminster Abbey. His charger, dumb companion through dark times is followed by the honours carried in life by his master. Among the vast crowds men predominate. Many have served under the dead soldier in war,--

--and shared his victories. Now for him--

--wars are ended, and the great eternal peace is his !
