

BRIGADE OF TANKS - - Sir John Capper, war-time Director-General of the Royal Tank Corps, inspects his former command.-Salisbury Plain-

---

Picture.:- The steel robot man has not yet arrived, but here are--

--the steel shells into which the ordinary man creeps--
--and becomes a threatening mobile thing, almost invulnerable to every attack !

Major-General Sir John Capper, inspecting, sees how the uncouth child--

--of his war command has grown, how it has developed in-- --deadliness and mobility. Sir John, of course, was the Director-General--

--of the Tank Corps at-- --its inception during the Great War. From an experimental half dozen it has grown to a strength--

--of 250 mechanised fighting units-- --of various types and classes. The old phrase about the clash of steel--

--will no longer mean sword fighting, but a head-on collision--

--between two of these new infernal machines. Salisbury Plain--

--has seen some strange sights, but none more fearsome than this !
