POPPIES FOR REMEMBRANCE - - Disabled soldiers, at the British Legion Poppy Factory, complete last of fifty-million poppies for Armistice Day.1932.

-Richmond.Surrey-

Picture.:- Ten years ago, a great idea was born, and the British Legion Poppy Factory started work, with its originator and 5 disabled soldiers. To-day--

--it employs 385 war scarred men, who between them have lost two-- --hundred and ninety limbs. The jobs they do have been fitted--

--to their capabilities. Many of them could do no other work than the-- --particular thing they are doing. These disabled men and-- --their families live in flats on the Factory Estate. It is a--

--colony peopled with living memorials of those-- awful years of frightfulness. Everyone of the millions of crosses--

--and poppies these hands make should be an argument against war, every wreath a silent plea for continued peace. On Armistice Day--

--His Majesty will place this wreath at the foot of the Cenotaph. These men will be there, remembering.
