

SCOTTISH POLICE REMEMBER - - Scarcely a uniform is seen at memorial service to the war dead of the Scottish constabulary.

-Edinburgh-

Picture.:- The war service records of our Police make inspiring chronicles. Scottish counties, like all others, gave generously to the front lines of battle.
To-day nearly four hundred officers and men of the Scottish Constabulary attend the annual service in memory of their fallen comrades. The multiplicity of-- --such services throughout the country surely add strength to any plea for disarmament.

Sir Godfrey Collins, Secretary of State for Scotland--

--places a memorial wreath at the Shrine. The service is--

--led by the Reverend John S. Ewen, City Police chaplain. Brigadier-General Duggeon, His Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary in Scotland, and Chief Constable Ross--

--also take part. The wail of a Highland lament adds to the melancholy atmosphere-- --of the occasion. Fourteen years have passed, but these others are not forgotten.
