

C-145P21

AS IN DAYS GONE BY - - Railway train, preceded by flag-man, passes through main streets of Newhaven

-Sussex-

Picture.:- This train might be called Newhaven's anachronism. In the midst of fast modern transport, moving at anything up to a--

--hundred miles an hour, this reminder of a past age leisurely proceeds at four miles an hour, to reduce the awful possibility of anyone lying down in-- --front of it, and waiting to be run over. It is preceded by a gentleman carrying a red flag of danger, and wagging a warning bell. It looks with contempt upon motors passing at forty and follows--

--its four miles per hour leader. If he was not there, it would just stop and wait for him. Every day it jogs through the town-- --on its adventurous journey. Of course, the inhabitants had to name it the "Newhaven City Express". That was inevitable ! But its career has been the soul of honour. It has never failed in keeping its appointments.