

2-1544251

SHELTERING FROM STORMS - - Large numbers of sea-lions seek refuge from Pacific gales along the Californian coast.

-U.S.A.-

---

Picture. :- Rough water has forced hundreds of sea--
--lions to seek shelter on the Californian coast.

The Pacific became too unfriendly for--

--them, so they got out ! They have commandeered the coast bays and inlets as camping spots, until the terrific gales subside.

It's difficult to get good pictures of these animals. Anything human scares them stiff, and some cameramen are human, so when the lions smell them, they shoot off into-- --the water and disappear in--

--no time. There they go ! Each one taking a fur coat worth only a few pence ! These animals are too young to be really valuable.

If they were, some 'sharper' would find a way--

--of skinning them of all they've got. When they're older, they'll have to be more careful.