Picture.:- Al Brown, the coloured bantamweight champion--

--should have opposed Peters, but he wrenched his knee. Louis Botes, the South African, takes his place.

The substitute <sup>starts</sup> only moderately. He soon warms up to his job, and gives Peters a busy time. The Battersea boy shows fine form in the-- --opening rounds, but the South African starts forcing the fighting, and balancing the accounts.

As the fight goes on, Peters appears to slow up, and Botes makes the best of his opportunities. Peters' chief job now is defence. By the way, he is the man with an--

--'S' on his pants. Neither man has-- --suffered any real damage. Seconds out again !

(Paragraph) Peters still makes a good--

--effort, but Botes is active enough to give him little pause for countering. The end--

--of twelve rounds sees the South African victor 'on points'.
