RAILWAY STATION COCKTAIL PARTY - - Novel entertainment in a Charles Street residence in aid of war veterans.

-London-

Picture.:- The season's most novel effort for a cocktail party.

The guests enter a railway station, give up their tickets--

--at the barrier, and then enter a first-class--

--waiting room. The Marchioness of Carisbrooke, is among-- --the many distinguished guests of the Honourable Mrs Ronald Greville--

--in whose house, this unusual party is staged for-- --the benefit of Veteran Ex-service men. The idea is that the railway line is-- --blocked, and all these passengers must do something to amuse themselves while waiting for a train. Well, that's not a bad--

--way to get a party going.

A dining car attendant is found to do a --

--'turn'. I am sure they don't call it that in Mayfair drawing rooms. Some steward--

--to continue in the vernacular. Later dancing on the-- --improvised railway platform is started. The party is immensely successful, and the Veterans association should benefit--

--with quite a substantial sum. Well, doesn't this show just how successful it is! Here: how! And here 's how again! Oh a great party!
